

SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS FOR INTERURBAN DAY

GEM THEATRE

In the case of a young man, my inclinations toward success in his profession, or success with an interesting spousal spouse; and if she can add to his income by singing in public, and if the husband believes that it is his duty to support his wife and her duty to be content to live within his income—under these conditions, is the wife justified in decking up a career for herself?

In other words—and we are a mere or less common expression these days—is woman's place the home?

This is the plot of a scene worked out with dramatic intensity in "The Womener strain," the latest of the "Who's Guilty?" series, to be shown at the Gem Theatre.

Anne Nitson plays the role of Isidor Price, wife of a rising young architect, Tom Price, played by Tom Moore. Her voice brings her fame and adoration much to the discomfort and final jealousy of her husband, for whom she finally commits an offense for which the law prescribes a terrific penalty.
